FORMAT MESSAGES

There are several different types of formatting that may be applied to individual email messages, such as themes, changing the background color, or applying styles. Themes are a predefined set of design elements that can be applied to a message. Styles are predefined elements that can be applied to fonts in a message. For information on formatting messages globally, see the Stationery and Fonts link in the Outlook page on the Training Web Site.

Messages are sent in one of three formats: HTML, Plain Text, or Outlook Rich Text (RTF) format. The table below provides a description of each of these types of message formats.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Format</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>HTML</td>
<td>The default format that Outlook uses is this one. It supports text formatting, numbering, bullets, pictures, and backgrounds in the body of the message. Styles and stationery are also supported. Most of the popular email packages use this format.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plain Text</td>
<td>This format is supported by all e-mail programs. Messages created using Plain Text do not contain any formatting.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rich Text Format (RTF)</td>
<td>This format supports formatting options such as text formatting, bullets, numbering, background colors, borders, and shading.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

When messages are sent in HTML format, it is possible to enhance the appearance of the message by applying stationery and themes to the message background. When stationery is used, it is possible to specify the background, fonts, bullets, images, and other elements that can be used in outgoing email messages.
